About the Seminar

The paradigm of processing huge datasets has been shifted from centralized architecture to distributed architecture. As the enterprises faced issues of gathering large chunks of data they found that the data cannot be processed using any of the existing centralized architecture solutions. Apart from time constraints, the enterprises faced issues of efficiency, performance and elevated infrastructure cost with the data processing in the centralized environment. With the help of distributed architecture these large organizations were able to overcome the problems of extracting relevant information from a huge data dump. One of the best open source tools used in the market to harness the distributed architecture in order to solve the data processing problems is Apache Hadoop. Using Apache Hadoop's various components such as data clusters, map-reduce algorithms and distributed processing, we will resolve various location-based complex data problems and provide the relevant information back into the system, thereby increasing the user experience.

Objectives of the Seminar

The seminar has been organized:

- i) To use the Big Data and Hadoop
- ii) To use Big Data and Hadoop as reporting tool (for decision making, research, etc) can afford to store data not previously viable. And we all know that once data is on tape, it's essentially the same as if it had been deleted - accessible only in extreme circumstances.

Enterprises who build their Big Data around Cloudera can afford to store literally all the data in their organization, and keep it all online for real-time interactive querying, business intelligence, analysis and visualization.

This seminar was inaugurated by Dr. Proloy Ghosh and Principal Vandana Malhotra.
